

Bouygues Construction places its trust in HR Access

Paris, 17th July 2008 – Once again, Bouygues Construction has demonstrated its faith in HR Access, by opting for HRa Suite 7, the new solution from the international Human Resources Management software publisher and Human Resources Outsourcing service provider.

To satisfy the requirements of this Group comprised of a host of companies – representing 53,000 staff – and to bring these together around a single HR project, Bouygues Construction has chosen to renew its confidence in HR Access and migrate to HRa Suite 7, the latest solution from HR Access. Implementation of the Human Resource Information System will be handled directly by the customer, who already has skills and expertise in HR Access solutions, backed up by the HR Access Services teams.

The first step in the project is 'Training management': "The migration of our current system to HRa Suite 7, intentionally focused initially around training management, is a project intended to bring together the numerous companies in the group," explains Bernard Mamessier, Director, Payroll and HRIS, Bouygues Construction.

The concepts in HRa Suite 7 are spawning a whole new generation of Human Resources Information Systems that bring business intelligence to the processes, like the new 'guided process' function, which is crucial in the deployment of training management within Bouygues Construction. Responding as they do to current and future issues, the concepts and technologies chosen and offered through HRa Suite 7 represent a real opportunity for HR Access customers in France who are experiencing strong international growth.
